Parents vs Children

Ever feel like your parents do not understand you at all? I know it sounds terribly stereotypical, but you cannot deny feeling misunderstood. This is common and it is not just our teen-angst. Parents just do not understand us; it is as simple as that.

This is mainly due to the rather large generation gap between us and our parents. Times have changed, and for some reason they have a hard time understanding this at times. Back when they were growing up, things that we find socially acceptable were considered horribly inappropriate. For example, guys and girls just hanging out is a lot more common than in the 60's and 70's. Back then a guy politely asked a girl if she would like to dance. Now they just come up behind a girl, grab her and sweep her to the floor.

So, considering we are a much more desensitized and open generation, it is only fair that our parents may have a hard time comprehending our actions. And, while I am not trying to completely justify their intolerance, we do have to understand that it is just new to them. Try explaining what you are doing and remind them that times have changed, in the nicest way possible of course.
